

Developing Areas Research Group (DARG) of the Royal Geographical Society (with The Institute of British Geographers)

Undergraduate Dissertation Prize Entries 2005

The following students are to be congratulated on having their dissertations submitted for the DARG/Earthscan Dissertation Prize.

Jemma Barker (University of Gloucestershire) 'An investigation into children's contributions to the household through unpaid work in Urban Zambia'

Kate English (University of Oxford) 'Evaluating free primary education in Nyeri Municipality, Kenya: A Case Study of a Delivery Welfare Policy'

Louise Gough (University of Birmingham) 'The real and imagined role of the community in resource management'

Katie Harris (University of Manchester) 'Diaries, Dhal and Data Research into use of diaries in South India as part of a development project'

Sophie Holmes Smith (University of Cambridge) 'Development and disability breaking the silent crisis? The case of community based rehabilitation and participation in Uganda'

Kate Mison (University College London) 'The impact of a free primary education policy in Malawi'

Deen Sharp (Queen Mary, University of London) 'Perceptions of street children in Dar-es-Salaam, Tanzania'

Serena Stone (University of Sheffield) 'Tide and time wait for no man: An evaluation of the impacts of charity work in developing countries: a Fijian example'

Nimmi Unadkat (Royal Holloway, University of London) 'Children's geographies in the Island of Omadhoo, South Ari Atoll The Maldives'

Harriet White (University of Edinburgh) 'Governance and Performance: a case study of identity construction among two Karen groups'